My vote is for TracDat. eLumen seems like another Banner--way more than we need.
TracDat seems easy to use and manage.

My overall inclination is that while eLumen is very dynamic, and has the piece for SAOs which is very nice, using it as we would actually want to would require a great shift in the way things are done, ie - we would essentially be moving everything to a rubric style evaluation. In the long run, I think that everyone would find it easy to use, but it would take quite the adjustment, and the learning curve would be rather large. Because of this, I'm not sure how receptive to it faculty would be. The fact that it is very mobile is helpful (I'm thinking for those programs that require observations, etc). I like how you can get information across SLOs and how counselors and others can track the progress on SLOs for students across their courses. For a selective program, such as nursing, I think that this would be great! And again, the SAO piece is nice, which I don't remember TracDat addressing. I'm just wondering if we need THAT MUCH for a school our size?

TracDat seems easy to use and would not require such a great shift. I also like the reminder feature.

Hi Scott!

The team is still considering options. I'm not sure if they have connected yet with Grossmont, but I know they plan to.

Let's touch base in January to see where things are at.

Thanks,
Todd

Hi Todd,

Have you had a chance to speak to any of our references? Hopefully you were able to speak to at least Grossmont Cuyamaca. Still interested in looking more closely at TracDat?

Just wanted to see where you are in your evaluation.

Thanks, Scott
